

Blackbird, perched high on a swinging oak branch,
Behind you were the blue lacustrine depths of a late winter sky,
And overhead the white clouds, drifting—drifting—
Too soon you flew away, leaving a bare branch trembling for the springtime.
But Oh, how happy you made me for one brief moment!